One Goal. Three Options.

Our goal is to offer the best quality education possible for each child. We also want to honor the needs of individual students and families by supporting each child with the educational program that best fits the individual and family. In a recent survey of the parents of elementary students, we learned many families wish to continue with remote instruction when we return to face-to-face instruction, which will hopefully occur as soon as October 1. We intend to continue to support all children and families so we are developing a menu of three different options to support your child's learning.

Face-to-Face Hybrid Model

Once we transition to a face-to-face model, we will serve children in classrooms while following the state guidelines that require students and staff to wear masks and maintain physical distancing of 6 feet.

The student day will be divided. All core instruction (the three "Rs") will be taught live and face-to-face with a classroom teacher. The last 40 minutes of each day will occur remotely with students learning from home. Art, Physical Education, and Music will be taught to students remotely.

Students will have opportunities to receive live supplementary supports such as reading assistance, English Language Learner Services, and IEP supports just like a traditional school year.

Online Remote Model

In the Online Remote Model, all instruction is provided by classroom teachers remotely. The teachers do all of the planning and support for students who will engage in classes live via computer.

The curriculum remains the same as in the Face-to-Face Hybrid Model, but students will not attend school physically. Students in Online Remote classrooms may come from any of the three Woodland Public Schools elementary schools.

In this model of at-home instruction, the Woodland Public Schools Teacher is the primary educator for students with parents providing support by ensuring their students do their studies and stay up on their schoolwork.

Lewis River Academy

Lewis River Academy (LRA) is a rich alternative for parents who want to be the primary educator for their children.

Instructional materials are provided to families and parents serve as the primary learning coach at home. In some grades, families will receive materials and access to an online learning platform while other grades engage in learning solely through online access.

Teachers at LRA support parents by planning each child's personalized learning program and check in weekly with students and parents. In this model of at-home instruction the parent is the primary educator with support provided by Woodland Public Schools teachers.
